These removals are due to licencing deals coming to an end. Often, the titles make their way back to Netflix in the following year, but sometimes they leave to go to other platforms. This month sees a selection of Netflix Originals being taken down, also.

The rights owners to the classic movies have their own streaming services or have already sold rights to them to another service. Netflix know that a large section of their userbase is younger and not as likely to watch the older movies, so why waste money on them?

Why does netflix almost never have any classic movies? - Reddit
